A DRESSY WAIST MODEL.

With fashions more and more inclining toward sheer and supple effects, the fancy of the designer is bound to run riot, and some very delightful models for frocks and waists are the result. The waist shown merits attention for its grace as well as its oddity. The full portions are shirred on the shoulders and at the waist line and are gathered down the front edges, over which the trimming bands are crossed in charming effect, while the wide armhole adds a popular touch to the whole. The vest of tucked chiffon and the long shirred sleeves add appreciably to the pleasing result. Any of the new soft silks would make up attractively by this mode, or chiffon cloth, crepe de chine, voile, or embroidered muslin would be suitable, 5 yards 22 inches wide being needed for the medium size. Six sizes, 32 to 42 inches, bust measure.

This pattern may be obtained by enclosing 10 cents to the Pattern Department, Washington Herald, 734 Fifteenth street northwest, and indicating number of pattern (6090) and size wanted.

DEAD HONORED BY G. A. R. MEN

Members of Kit Carson Post Hold Memorial Services in Church.

Eulogy Delivered by Thomas H. McKee, Who Speaks on the Final Roll Call—Other Features.

In the presence of an audience that taxed the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church to its capacity, the Kit Carson Post, No. 2, G. A. R., last night held its annual memorial service.

The exercises opened in military style, the veterans marching into the church while the assembly hymn was being sung by the choir.

Following the usual prayers and preliminary singing, the post commander, John Middleton, and Adjutant C. F. Keifer fulfilled the memorial exercises according to the order of organization. Mr. Middleton propounded a number of questions to the adjutant, serving to bring out the import of the meeting, and to commemorate the dead comrades. An air of pathos was lent the services when Mr. Keifer called the roll of those members who had died in the last year.

This part of the services concluded, Mrs. R. M. Warren Jones sang "One Sweetly Solemn Thought."

Thomas H. McKee was introduced to deliver the eulogy. He said, in part:

"The final roll-call of the names of those departed comrades makes this memorial service one of precious memory. To us it is no unmeaning ceremony. These names are quite familiar. For nearly half a century we have responded to the roll-call of war and peace, since first we met on tented fields.

"We were bareheaded boys or strong young men when, at the first roll-call, we stood together as strangers. We wore the same uniform. We marched under the same flag. We swore to defend the same cause, and greeted each other as comrades, a name and salutation never to be forgotten."

Following the eulogy, Rev. S. M. Alford, pastor of Grace Church, delivered an eloquent sermon, telling of his esteem for the veterans of the civil war and expressing his sorrow "for those who gave up their lives in order that the republic might live."

His text was chosen from the Second Book of Samuel, and dealt with the friendship existing between David and Jonathan.

"Every soldier should read this story of war stories in the Bible," said he. "The war contained in the Bible are as good as any ever written."

SOLE AIM OF WOMEN

Miss Nethersole So Defines "Motherhood" in Lecture.

SOME DENIED RIGHT TO LIVE

Actress Insists Present Industrial System in America Is Wrong—Replicates Sharply to Questioner Who Takes Exception to Her Views. Favors Old-age Insurance.

New York, May 10.—Miss Olga Nethersole lectured at Cooper Union this afternoon to Club A of the People's Institute, 218 East Fifth street. Her theme was "The need of industrial insurance for working people."

Miss Nethersole said, among other things, a body's supreme right is the right to live, and that under the present system in America we do not all get it. Half-sick persons have to keep on working in places that do not improve their health, because it takes more money than they've got to lay off and try to get well.

Now, if employers were compelled by law, as they have been compelled in Germany for twenty-three years, to hold up every week a tiny percent of everybody's wages, there's your insurance fund to guarantee that lay-off privileges when it's needed. And, by the way, the medical profession is the holiest profession in the world, because at the bottom of it lies the magnificent instinct of humanitarianism. And it isn't right that persons who are diseased should have children.

"My plea," Miss Nethersole said, "is for an end to false modesty. It is criminal to bring into the world a child who is maimed or diseased. I plead for a governmental recognition of a standard of health."

Questions for Her to Answer.

Algernon St. John Brennan, who was among those present, fired a number of questions at Miss Nethersole.

"Miss Nethersole," he said, "do you believe that marriage is the sole aim of women?"

"By nature it's so," she said. "It is the first great primal cause of virtue."

"But nature isn't always right," flashed back Brennan.

"Always," replied Miss Nethersole. There was that in her manner of speaking that seemed to leave the meeting with nothing on its hands but voting its thanks and clearing out, but Mr. Brennan had his nerve right with him.

"Nature is sometimes savage. It seems to me, Miss Nethersole, that it isn't always right. Take the case of—"

"Mr. Brennan, nature is always right," A. St. J. Brennan wouldn't let go even then.

"At the risk of being tedious," persisted Mr. Brennan, "I would like to know how about the women who sacrifice the joys of the nursery, of marriage, and all that, in order to—well, take for instance, Mme. Bernhardt and Patti, and yourself, Miss Nethersole—artists who sacrifice all these things in order to help the growth of the finest instincts in the human breast?"

Not Yet Satisfied.

Mr. Brennan thumped his chest and continued:

"Women who do so much to—"

"Ah-h-h," lamented Miss Nethersole, "ah-h-h-h, we do so lit-tul, so-o-o-o lit-tul."

Miss Nethersole was thanked by rising vote. Then she was eclipsed by girls who massed themselves around and probably got a pretty accurate idea of just what is the color of her wonderful gown.

JAPANESE NOT AFTER LOAN

Baron Sakatani, in New York, Says He Is on Pleasure Trip.

Oriental Financier Denies Story that Nation Is in Need of Money.

New York, May 10.—Baron Yoshio Sakatani, ex-minister of finance of the war cabinet of Japan, and for twenty-five years one of the Emperor's fiscal advisers, together with a party of nine bankers, officials of the finance department, and business men of Japan, arrived in New York from Victoria, B. C., to-day en route to Europe, and thence around the world to Japan.

When the baron and his party sailed from Yokohama, a month ago, all of the Tokyo papers, including the one commonly supposed to be the mouthpiece of the government, said that the mission he and his party were on was one to raise another foreign loan for the empire, sorely needed in the present embarrassed financial condition of the government.

Baron Sakatani, through his secretary and official mouthpiece, Masajiro Yokoyama, a director of the Bank of Japan, made definite denial to-day of the report that he came to America in any official capacity, or that the object of his visit here and abroad was to negotiate a loan for his government. The baron expressed entire confidence in the government's ability to meet the first of its domestic war loans, falling due in July, with cash payment.

"The baron wishes it known," said Mr. Yokoyama in the baron's apartments reserved at the Holland House this afternoon, "that he is making this trip to America and Europe purely for pleasure and without any official commission whatsoever."

The baron's party comprises some of the largest financial men in Japan.

Mr. Yokoyama, speaking for the baron, explained that the presence of all of these financial weights of Japan in the baron's party was purely a matter of coincidence.
